Dr. Sirotek Vongvichit and Australia's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Penny Wong, on Tuesday talk to children at a primary school in Vientiane.

Australia reaffirms commitment to quality primary education in Laos

Times Reporters

Australia's support for primary education will continue through the second phase of the BEQUAL Programme, with AUD28 million to be provided over four years from 2022-26.

This year, BEQUAL will focus on supporting the Ministry of Education and Sports' new system for teachers' professional development to complement the transition of the national curriculum roll-out.

The objective is that once teachers have received the improved teaching and learning resources, they can then access regular and high-quality support for use in the classroom. A grant-awarding primary school by the Lao and Australian governments is to ensure inclusive access to quality education for all girls and boys, of all ethnicities and abilities.

A report at the programme was presented on Tuesday when Australia's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Penny Wong, joined Deputy Minister Dr Sirotek Vongvichit at a primary school in Vientiane.

They observed Lao language and science and environmental classes being taught using the new national primary curriculum, teaching and learning materials developed by the Research Institute for Educational Sciences with the support of the Australian government.

They were pleased to see that in all classrooms students were collaborating with each other, engaging with the learning materials, and learning through experiential.

Minister Wong and Dr Sirotek Vongvichit also visited several displays prepared by the Research Institute for Educational Sciences and the Department of Teacher Education showcasing the educational and teacher training resources created with the support of the Basic Education Quality and Access in Laos (BEQUAL) programme.

For example, they were introduced to the materials used in the Spoken Lao Programme that supports students who don't have Lao as their mother tongue.

The governments of Laos and Australia have a long partnership in education development, most recently through the nationwide implementation of the new national primary curriculum and acquisition of 21st-century skills.

The new teaching methodology is based on engaging students through practical activities, problem solving, and critical thinking. Gender and disability inclusive approaches are strongly emphasised in the new curriculum materials, along with teacher training resources and effective teaching approaches.

Dr Sirotek Vongvichit said "Laos and Australia share a mutual interest in ensuring that all young children, particularly those experiencing disadvantage, receive a quality primary education."

"Since 2015, Australia has been supporting the Ministry of Education and Sports through the BEQUAL Programme, with the aim of accelerating the implementation of the new national primary curriculum, and the design of teacher training and professional development. I am delighted to be here today with Minister Wong to observe the new curriculum being taught in the classroom."

Minister Wong co-chaired the Ministry of Education and Sports on the completion of the rollout of the national primary curriculum and recognised the key role of teachers in shaping the future of the next generation.

Quality education underpins sustainable economic development and with one of the youngest populations in South-East Asia, Laos is well-positioned to reap the demographic dividend of having a healthy and well-educated workforce to drive economic growth.

In primary education, a student-centered approach ensures active learning, collaboration, and experimentation!

That's exactly what #BEQUAL with the support of the Australian Government, is focused on providing for primary students in Lao PDR.

Penny Wong, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Australia recently joined H.E Dr Sisouk Vongvichit, Vice-Minister of Education and Sports, Lao PDR at a primary school in Vientiane to observe classes being taught using new curriculum teaching and learning materials.

The new teaching methodology of the new curriculum is based on engaging students through practical activities, problem solving, and critical thinking.

After integrating the final year of the curriculum in 2023, BEQUAL will focus on teacher professional development, ensuring teachers receive ongoing, high-quality support to implement the new pedagogical approach effectively.

KPL Penny Wong, Australian Minister for Foreign Affairs, joined Dr Sisouk Vongvichit, Vice Minister of Education and Sports at a primary school in Vientiane on May 16.

They observed Lao Language and Science and Environment classes being taught using the new National Primary Curriculum teaching and learning materials, developed by Research Institute for Educational Sciences with the support of the Australian Government.

They were pleased to see that in all classrooms, students were collaborating with each other, engaging with the learning materials and learning through experimentation.

Minister Wong and Dr Sisouk Vongvichit also visited several displays prepared by the Research Institute for Educational Sciences and the Department of Teacher Education showcasing the educational and teacher training resources created with the support of the Basic Education Quality and Access in the Lao PDR (BEQUAL) programme.

For example, they were introduced to the materials used in the Spoken Lao Program that supports students who don't have Lao as their mother tongue.

The Lao government and Australia have a long partnership in education sector development, most recently through the nationwide implementation of the new National Primary Curriculum that facilitates active learning and acquisition of 21st century skills.

The new teaching methodology of the new curriculum is based on engaging students through practical activities, problem solving and critical thinking. Gender and disability inclusive approaches are strongly emphasised in the new curriculum materials. Gender and disability inclusive approaches are strongly emphasised in the new curriculum materials, teacher training resources and teaching approach.

"The Lao PDR and Australia share a mutual interest in ensuring all young children, particularly those experiencing disadvantage, receive quality primary education. Since 2015, Australia has been supporting the Ministry of Education and Sports, through the BEQUAL Program, with the nationwide implementation of a new National Primary Curriculum, and the design of teacher training and professional development. I am delighted to be here today with Minister Wong to observe the new curriculum being taught in the schools," said Dr Sisouk Vongvichit.

Minister Wong congratulated the Ministry of Education and Sports on the completion of the renewal of the National Primary Curriculum and recognised the key role of teachers in shaping the future of the next generation. Quality education underpins sustainable economic development and with one of the youngest populations in South-East Asia, the Lao PDR is well positioned to reap the demographic dividend of having a healthy and well-educated workforce to drive economic growth.

Australia's support to primary education will continue through the second Phase of the BEQUAL Program, with AUD$ 28 million over four years (2022-2026). In 2021, BEQUAL will focus on supporting the Ministry of Education and Sports' new system for teachers' professional development. This will complement the finalisation of the national curriculum roll-out. The objective is that once teachers have received the improved teaching and learning resources, they can then access regular and high-quality support for use in the classroom. A cross-cutting priority shared by the Lao PDR and Australian governments is to ensure inclusive access to quality education for all girls and boys, of all ethnicities and abilities.
