Laos, Australia publicise needs of people with disabilities

Times Reporters

The Lao and the Australian governments are jointly raising awareness and understanding of disability issues and child protection and safeguarding best practices.

To mark International Day of People with Disability on December 3, Laos' Ministry of Education and Sports and Australiana government representatives organised a workshop in Vientiane on December 5-6 to help more people understand disability and child protection and safeguarding best practices.

The day aims to increase public awareness, understanding and acceptance of people with disabilities and celebrate their achievements and contributions.

The theme for 2023 is 'United in action to rescue and achieve the sustainable development goals for, with and by persons with disabilities'.

According to the 2017 Lao Social Indicator Survey, 2 percent of children aged 2 to 4 have functional difficulty in at least one domain (seeing, hearing, walking, fine motor skills, communicating, learning, playing, controlling behaviour).

This percentage increases with remoteness and poverty. Children with severe disabilities are usually kept at home and are often 'hidden' to the outside world, due to stigma and discrimination.

Factors such as gender, ethnicity, poverty, distance to school or physical access to classrooms and bathroom facilities constitute other barriers to the education of children with disabilities.

Speaking on the occasion, Minister of Education and Sports, Associate Prof. Dr Phout Simmalavong, said "This event demonstrates a renewed joint commitment; the education ministry will continue to work in partnership with Australia on improving access to quality education for children with disabilities."

The Ambassador of Australia to Laos, Mr Paul Kelly, said "Disability inclusion is a core priority for the Australian government and a cross-cutting issue in our development assistance programme. Australia is committed to supporting the ministry, through the Basic Education Quality and Access in Laos programme (BEQUAL), to provide quality primary education for all children in Laos, no matter their abilities or their gender."

Training is designed to improve understanding, knowledge and skills in relation to inclusive education for staff who form the ministry's core gender training team, he added.

Dr Phout Simmalavong said "Everyone, staff and teachers play a vital role in promoting the concept of "No one left behind". Our job is to ensure that policy is put into practice and that teachers receive adequate support to meet the needs of all students, regardless of gender, ethnicity, or ability. This two-day workshop provides not only the skills but also a network for teachers to gain support from other sectors."

Every class group is different and, during their career, teachers will encounter a wide diversity of learner abilities, backgrounds, and aspirations.

Being a good teacher is about adapting teaching styles to meet these diverse needs. Disability is just one aspect of this. So teachers need to understand how to adapt their teaching to ensure that all students can fully participate, and feel welcome, in class.

The education ministry is looking forward to more inclusive classrooms, where all students, especially those who are disadvantaged, have the opportunity to realise their potential through access to quality education, delivered by skilled teachers and to ensure safety for all children at schools, the minister said.

Ministry of Education and Sports and the Australian Government promote awareness and understanding of disability issues and child protection and safeguarding best practices.

‹ Previous

On the occasion of the International Day of People with Disability, MoES and Australia organized a two-day workshop on understanding disability and promoting child protection and safeguarding best practices.

The International Day of People with Disability (IDPWD) is held on 3 December each year. It is a United Nations observed day celebrated internationally. IDPWD aims to increase public awareness, understanding and acceptance of people with disabilities and celebrate their achievements and contributions.

The theme for 2023 is 'United in action to rescue and achieve the sustainable development goals for, with and by persons with disabilities'.

According to the 2017 Lao Social Indicator Survey II, 2% of children aged 2 to 4 have a functional difficulty in at least one domain (seeing, hearing, walking, fine motor skills, communicating, learning, playing, controlling behaviors). This percentage increases with remoteness and poverty. Children with severe disabilities are usually kept at home and are often 'hidden' to the outside world, due to stigma and discrimination. Factors such as gender, ethnicity, poverty, distance to school or physical access to classrooms and bathroom facilities constitute other barriers to the education of children with disabilities in Lao PDR.

The COVID-19 pandemic eroded education and development gains across the region with the biggest impacts felt by the most vulnerable – particularly women and girls, people living with a disability and those in rural and remote areas.

Recognizing these challenges and the importance of mobilizing support for inclusive education, the Ministry of Education and Sports of Lao PDR (MoES) and the Australian Government, through the BEQUAL program, organized a two-day training workshop on 5th and 6th December at the Research Institute for Educational Sciences. The event was opened by H.E. Assoc. Prof. Dr. Phout Simmalavong, Minister of Education and Sports and H.E. Paul Kelly, Ambassador of Australia to Lao PDR.

"This event demonstrates a renewed joint commitment; the Ministry of Education will continue to work in partnership with Australia on improving access to quality education for children with disabilities" said Dr. Phout Simmalavong in his opening remarks.

H.E. Paul Kelly added "Disability inclusion is a core priority for the Australian Government and a cross-cutting issue in our development assistance program. Australia is committed to supporting the Ministry of Education, through the BEQUAL program, provide quality primary education for all children in Laos, no matter their abilities or their gender."

The two-day training was designed to improve understanding, knowledge, and skills in relation to inclusive education for 35 MoES staff who form MoES' core Gender Training team. The team have been drawn from 16 different departments and 2 institutes of the Ministry. The event will also involve development partners and representatives from disabled people's organisations who will share their insights into how children with a disability can be supported to thrive in the education system.

Following opening remarks by H.E. Assoc. Prof. Dr. Phout Simmalavong, Minister of Education and Sports and H.E. Paul Kelly participants toured an exhibition of teaching and learning resources that have been produced with the support of the BEQUAL Program, development partners, and disabled people's organisations. The exhibition was followed by focused training for MoES' Gender Trainers on supporting learners with disabilities through policy level action. The final activity of the event was a panel discussion featuring guest speakers with firsthand experience of supporting learners with disabilities.

The objective of the training was to ensure that relevant staff from MOES have a deep understanding about the challenges faced by children with disabilities in the education system, and how to ensure child protection and safeguarding for all children in school.

The workshop will also provide MoES' Gender Trainers with a network of specialists and organizations they can go to for advice.

Dr. Phout Simmalavong said "Everyone, staff and teachers play a vital role in promoting the concept of "No one left behind". Our job is to ensure that policy is put into practice and that teachers receive adequate support to meet the needs of all students, regardless of gender, ethnicity, or ability. This two-day workshop provides not only the skills but also a network for teachers to gain support from other sectors."

H.E. Paul Kelly said "Disability is one of the most serious barriers to education across the globe. Inclusive education is a powerful force for social change. We believe effective Principals and teachers and community involvement is key to ensure lessons and schools are inclusive for all children, no matter their ability, gender or ethnicity."

Every class group is different and during their career, teachers will encounter a wide diversity of learner abilities, backgrounds, and aspirations. Being a good teacher is about adapting teaching styles to meet these diverse needs. Disability is just one aspect of this. So, teachers need to understand how to adapt their teaching to ensure all students can fully participate, and feel welcome, in class.

H.E. Dr Phout concluded: "I am looking forward to more inclusive classrooms, where all students, especially those experiencing disadvantage, have the opportunity to realise their potential through access to quality education, delivered by skilled teachers and to ensure safety for all child at schools".

The event will also involve development partners and representatives from disabled people's organisations who will share their insights into how children with a disability can be supported to thrive in the education system.

Understanding disabilities - presented by the Director of Disability Services Center

Following opening remarks by Assoc. Prof. Dr. Phout Simmalavong, Minister of Education and Sports and Paul Kelly participants toured an exhibition of teaching and learning resources that have been produced with the support of the BEQUAL Program, development partners, and disabled people's organisations. The exhibition was followed by focused training for MoES' Gender Trainers on supporting learners with disabilities through policy level action. The final activity of the event was a panel discussion featuring guest speakers with firsthand experience of supporting learners with disabilities.

The objective of the training was to ensure that relevant staffs from MOES have a deep understanding about the challenges faced by children with disabilities in the education system, and how to ensure child protection and safeguarding for all children in school.

The workshop will also provide MoES' Gender Trainers with a network of specialists and organizations they can go to for advice.

"Everyone, staff and teachers play a vital role in promoting the concept of "No one left behind". Our job is to ensure that policy is put into practice and that teachers receive adequate support to meet the needs of all students, regardless of gender, ethnicity, or ability. This two-day workshop provides not only the skills but also a network for teachers to gain support from other sectors," said Dr. Phout Simmalavong.

"Disability is one of the most serious barriers to education across the globe. Inclusive education is a powerful force for social change. We believe effective Principals and teachers and community involvement is key to ensure lessons and schools are inclusive for all children, no matter their ability, gender or ethnicity," said Paul Kelly.

Every class group is different and during their career, teachers will encounter a wide diversity of learner abilities, backgrounds, and aspirations. Being a good teacher is about adapting teaching styles to meet these diverse needs. Disability is just one aspect of this. So, teachers need to understand how to adapt their teaching to ensure all students can fully participate, and feel welcome, in class.

"I am looking forward to more inclusive classrooms, where all students, especially those experiencing disadvantage, have the opportunity to realise their potential through access to quality education, delivered by skilled teachers and to ensure safety for all child at schools," Minister concluded.

Laos, Australia publicise needs of people with disabilities

The Lao and the Australian governments are jointly raising awareness and understanding of disability issues and child protection and safeguarding best practices.

To mark International Day of People with Disability on December 3, Laos' Ministry of Education and Sports and Australiann government representatives organised a workshop in Vientiane on December 5-6 to help more people understand disability and child protection and safeguarding best practices.

Dr Phout Simmalavong observes educational Braille materials at an event to mark International Day of People with Disability.

The day aims to increase public awareness, understanding and acceptance of people with disabilities and celebrate their achievements and contributions.

The theme for 2023 is 'United in action to rescue and achieve the sustainable development goals for, with and by persons with disabilities'.

According to the 2017 Lao Social Indicator Survey, 2 percent of children aged 2 to 4 have functional difficulty in at least one domain (seeing, hearing, walking, fine motor skills, communicating, learning, playing, controlling behaviour).

This percentage increases with remoteness and poverty. Children with severe disabilities are usually kept at home and are often 'hidden' to the outside world, due to stigma and discrimination.

Factors such as gender, ethnicity, poverty, distance to school or physical access to classrooms and bathroom facilities constitute other barriers to the education of children with disabilities.

Speaking on the occasion, Minister of Education and Sports, Associate Prof. Dr Phout Simmalavong, said "This event demonstrates a renewed joint commitment; the education ministry will continue to work in partnership with Australia on improving access to quality education for children with disabilities."

The Ambassador of Australia to Laos, Mr Paul Kelly, said "Disability inclusion is a core priority for the Australian government and a cross-cutting issue in our development assistance programme. Australia is committed to supporting the ministry, through the Basic Education Quality and Access in Laos programme (BEQUAL), to provide quality primary education for all children in Laos, no matter their abilities or their gender."

Training is designed to improve understanding, knowledge and skills in relation to inclusive education for staff who form the ministry's core gender training team, he added.

Dr Phout Simmalavong said "Everyone, staff and teachers play a vital role in promoting the concept of "No one left behind". Our job is to ensure that policy is put into practice and that teachers receive adequate support to meet the needs of all students, regardless of gender, ethnicity, or ability.
